Lincoln's Half Hour as a Treasury

Watchman. James Etter, an old soldier who for over twenty years has been one of the day watchmen in the Winder Building, which is occupied by the Bureau of the Second Auditor of the Treasury, relates with pride an interesting experience he had in 1863. As he was alone in the building one sultry July Sunday morning, a tall, clerical-looking man entered from Seventeenth street and politely asked him whether Surgeon Barnes was in his office. He replied that Barnes had not been there since the preceding day. The stranger thanked him and retired, but returned half an hour later with the same inquiry. Again receiving a reply in the negative,

"I sm Mr. Lincoln, the President. You allow me to take your place as wachman, while you go to Surgeon Barnes' house and tell him I want to see him. Let me have your badge, and I will sit right here in your chair and carefully attend to your duties till vou come back.

The veteran, in relating the story, says that for a moment he was speechless from astonishment, but, quickly recovering himself, he pinned his badge on the coat of the President of the United States and hurried off after Dr. Barnes, whom he brought back with him.

"Well," said the President, as he re-turned the badge to its rightful possessor, "I have proven true to my trust as your substitute, and nothing has gone wrong while you were away."

The old watchman feels proud to think that he is the only policeman who was ever relieved by the President. Surgeon Barnes lived on Lafayette square, and it took Etter half an hour to go there and back; so for that space of time Abraham Lincoln acted as a watchman at the Treasury Department.

Changing Canaries' Color. The following is from the proceedings of the Berlin Physiological Society: Starting with the observed fact that canaries, fed with cayenne pepper, acquire a ruddy plumage, Dr. Sauermaon has based upon it a scientific investigation of canaries, fowls, pigeons, and other birds. From these he obtained the following results: Feeding with pepper only produces an effect when given to young birds before they moult; the color of the feathers of older birds cannot be affected. Moisture facilitates the change of color to ruddy hue, which is again discharged under the influence of sunlight and cold. A portion of the constituents of cayenne pepper is quite inactive, as, for instance, piperin and several extractives; similarly the red coloring matter alone of the pepper has no effect on the color of the feathers. It is rather the triolein, which occurs in the pepper in large quantities, together with the characteristic pigment, which brings about the change of color, by holding the red pigment of the pepper in solution. Glycerine may be used instead of triolein to bring about the same result. The same statement holds good with regard to the feeding of birds with aniline colors. The red pigment of the pepper is also stored in the egg yelk as well as in the feathers. The first appearance of the pigment in the yelk may be observed as a colored ring four days after the commencement of feeding with the pigment dissolved in fat. After a further two days' feeding the whole yelk is colored.

Abrupt Transitions.

It was a justice of the high court to whom, in former days, was attributed the famous exordium of a charge to a jury in a case of larceny. "For forty centuries the thunders of Sinai have echoed through the world, 'Thou shalt not steal,' This is also a principle of the common law and a rule of equity. When Swift and Pope made their celebrated excursions into the art of sinking into poetry they never contrived any bathos more perfect or complete than this. Almost as delightful, though expressed without the same literary skill, is the sentence of a president of a court-martial: "Prisoner, not only have you committed murder, but you have run a bayonet through the breeches of one of her Majesty's uni-forms." Perhaps, however, the best of all such judicial utterances is that ascribed to a rural justice of the peace:
Prisoner, a bountiful Providence has endowed you with health and strength, instead of which you go round the country stealing hens. GENERAL BRINE, R. E. (with the sanction of the English war office), and two members of the Balloon Society have left for Gibraltar. They took with them two balloons of a capacity of 40,000 and 30,000 cubic feet. Their expedition is a scientific one to determine the currents at a high altitude across the Straits of Gibraltar. The prevailing wind at a low altitude has always been from the Atlantic to the Mediterranean. Aeronauts, meteorologists and scientists take considerable interest in this attempt to solve the problem of the currents at a high al-titude between Gibraltar and Africa.

LOVERS OF FINE MILLINERY MAY NOW ENJOY THEMSELVES.

INEW YORK CORRESPONDENCE.

N millinery, as in other parts of our costumes, women who care for elaborately trimmed things may prepare to enjoy themselves this season. Embroidery runs wild on the newest gewns, particularly in the gold and silver and other metallic shades. Well for those who are expert needlewomen, for they can, with plenty of time and comparatively little money, make themselves obje ts of envy to less fortunate neighbors. Even millinery feels the influence, for many bonnets owe their chief attractiveness to bands of gold fil gree, embroidery, gold face, or gold cord, to which they give a very dressy effect.

In bats the broad brim is still the favorite. Smooth and Angera felts are equally fashionable, with brims turned up in a point, or rolling in front, and tapering off to the back. The brims are not lined. though sometimes bound with rubber. An unusually pretty and becoming hat has a curving and slightly rolling brim of shaggy felt, while the crown is of velvet gathered in Tam O'Shanter fashion upon a narrow velvet band, with a bird placed at the front. In fact, birds of all sizes and colors, and even butterflies, are perched here and there upon hats and bonnets, in as airy a posture as can be; and the more ready they seem to take to their wings, the better for decorative purposes. The velvet Tam O'Shanter crown can also be used very prettily for children's wear, with very broad, straight, stiff brims. Cloth, too, is a favorite material with milliners just now. One very pretty example of its use is a capote covered with cr-amwhite cloth so as to show just a folded edge of black velvet. There is a knot of vellow velvet ribbon in front, in which is fastened a jet dagger, and strings of the same are carried from thenes to the back. Lavender-gray cloth bonnets are some-times embroidered in silver or in steelcolor, and trimmed with groups of black or gray birds. Bonne's trimmed with flowers are now beginning to put in an appearance, and there seems a strong ikelihood of their becoming popular. Roses and chrysanthemums are the varieties most commonly used. Shapes are much the same as they were at the beginning of the season. Fashion continues to patronize the turban or oval-shaped bonnet, though several efforts have recently been made to bring out models apotes that have been trying the patience of so many round-faced, generously proportioned ladies during the past season. Those women who have the time, money and disposition to be odd in their toilet accessories have hit upon card-cases with watches inserted. The idea is a sensible one, perhaps, if it will serve to curtail the gossip which usually prolongs feminine calls. A visitor can rarely see a clock on these occasions, and even if one is within the range of vision, it is not easy to keep one's eye upon it without appearing rude to the hostess. Apropos of calls, I am able to give several illustrations of pretty visiting toilets. The one worn by the girl seated on the divan is a confection in harmonious shades of bronze. The skirt has a plain back breadth and a front slightly draped from the left side, both being of pale-bronze lady's cloth in a very fine quality. The under-panel at the side is in lady's cloth of a darker shade, and is heavily embroidered to the very top in metallic threads and beads similar in hue to the ground-work, but slightly iridescent. The basque has a double vest-front, its upper section being of pale-bronze surah, laid in cross-folds, and the lower part being of the plain lighter shade of cloth, as also the smooth fitting high sleeves and back pieces of the basque. The side-fronts are of the darker material, and are embroidered in a manner similar to that of the skirt.

There is one fad of f shion which women without much money can indulge in, although the rich ones will carry it to excess in their New Year's receptions. Chrysanthemums have only become the craze since bric-a-brac hunters brought the Japanese art decoration to America. Every one then went in for the Japanese. until it became so popular that every home possessed more or less of it. A set of lacquered trays, a Chinese lantern and three or four fans constituted the Japanese art decoration in many houses; but it sufficed with the aid of a few china asters or chrysanthemums, and from that period the rage for the Japanese bower not only took root, but has gone on steadily in-creasing day by day, blooming in all the freshness and splendor of its manifold shades, a living proof that no matter from what country of the world the beautiful comes, it is always appreciated by those who have an eye for artistic effect. In "I wish to be employed under the Doorkeeper, sir," said he, "and if you all Chinese or Japanese art the chrysan-themum forms the most important floral decoration, and, together with the flight of cranes, is one of the most popular designs used by the yellow-skinned artists of Pekin and Yeddo. A little instruction may not be out of place. Chrysanthe mums demand high vases, stands or jardinieres, and must never be dwarfed by having their stems cut short. This takes away fifty per cent. of their leauty at least, and gives them a common-place, every-day appearance that is far from being their habitual aspect. To women in search of a pretty decoration for the corner of a room let me suggest one of the large tubular Japanese umbrella stands, in either cheap or costly ware as you choose. In it place a high, full, and sheaf-like bunch of corysanthemums, then fill in the gaps with bronze foliage and here and there branches of mimosa, if procurable. A broad moire ribbon is passed a candidate still.

round the stems just above the jar, and knotted with all the taste a mistress of a household is capable of putting into such elegant triffes that make homes so stylish and pretty, and cause men to say the moment they enter a room, "A woman of taste lives here." Large bowls of similar flowers are also made more at-tractive, if possible, by a broad band and bow of ribbon circling the top, and giv-ing a stylish finish to a Japanese decora-

Really, a woman of fashion will take more pains with her toilet to receive callers of her own sex than of the other, because she knows which are the closest critics, and fair makers of calls are equally par icular. The visitor in the account nying picture wears a dress designed in a pale shade of French gray and black. The skirt bangs in long. straight lines from the waist, opening half-way up the side of the front gore over folds of black faille. At the sides the skirt separates clear to the top, showing another series of black folds. The corsage is simple in outline, having only a plain, double-breasted plastron front, and rather loose high sleeves. The real elegance of the toilet depends largely upon the arrangement of bands of silver passementerie or embroidery along the edges of the plaited panels in the skirt, around the pointed plastron on the basque, and descending down the front of the skirt in a constantly widening pattern to the very hem of the dress. The gloves are gray, as likewise the bonnet, which is faced with black velvet, and has short black-velvet strings. The companion costume is a house-dress of blue-gray crepe, trimmed with very light open passementerie in silver, old gold, and blue-gr y. The skirt has a very full front drapers reaching to the hem, and separated from the straight back breadth by means of the passementerie. The corsage has a full opening in V-shape over a plaited crepe plastron, and around the arm-holes and at the bottom of the pointed front is finished off with the bands of the passementerie. The sleeves are very loose and full, and terminate at the elbow. It should be added that the favorite shades this season are chestnut light of browns, delicate grays, orange, leghorn yellow, light blues, and, in general, such shades as contrast well with black and

In the matter of colors, a clever actress said to me: "We all feel more or less vaguely the truth that the expression of materials varies. Simplicity, modesty and vouthfulness are suggested by the organdies, tarlatans, mulls-the materials which have a transperent effect and donot shine. We dress the ingenue in white muslin and Lady Macbeth in black velvet, on general principles; and as soon as the girl becomes the good, poor man's bride we put her in a simple princess gown of gray. Cotton fabrics, after be-ing starched and ironed, suggest a kind of moral purity. The nun's head-dress seems to settle it." Then, after a reflective pause, the actress added roguishly:

Still, there is the leading man's shirtfront."-Daisy Dart, in Chicago Ledger, Ever Study Doorkeeping?

These are days of civil-service reform. The man that wants to secure a place under the Government nowadays must have a strong "pull," indeed, to "get there." The other day a Mis-sissippi Republican anxious to serve under the new Doorkeeper of the House, thought it worth while to enlist the good-will of our facetious friend, Congressman Allen, in his behalf. He entered Mr. Allen's committee-room and preferred his request:

"Take a seat, sir," gravely remarked Allen, "and I will examine you." "Have you ever been a doorkeeper?" "No, sir, but I think that with your upport-
